Omaha Beach (or Golden Beach) ends west of the town of Vierville sur Mer. Approximately km of fine sand bordered by the road with a beach that extends considerably at low tide. The beach is supervised in the summer season and there are a few shops around the west side of the Rue de la Mer. East side, we reach the area of Saint-Laurent-sur. The landing beach. The largest of the D-Day assault areas, Omaha Beach stretched over 10 km (6 miles) between the fishing port of Port-en-Bessin on the east and the mouth of the Vire River on the west.

A ten-mile stretch between Omaha Beach to the west and Juno to the east, Gold was divided into sectors H, I, J, and K, with the main landing areas being Jig Green and Red plus King Green and Red. Omaha Beach was the only possible landing place between Utah Beach, essential for the attack on Cherbourg, and the British and Canadian beaches to the east. If that had not been the case, then it would never have been chosen as one of the invasion beaches, for it was a naturally strong defensive position. Omaha East is the monster-sized historical module portraying the eastern half of the D-Day landing at Omaha beach and the fighting directly inland. Together with Omaha West, it simulates the entire landing at Omaha beach.
